A story should have a spine just like a book
From one point to one end
One point to another
The long winding road

A story should have a spine just like a book
And filled with pages
Pages filled with lines
Lines and lines of prose
Like the lines across my face
They tell the story
Of a life

A life should have a spine just like a book
And be full of pages
Just like the pages in a book
It should captivate
It should engage
It should articulate those words within

A story should have a page
Should have a page with a name
A name carved out in history
From stars and stars ago

A life should have a story
And a story should have a spine
A spine that stands so straight and tall
That props you up and prevents you fall
A spine the guides your way and directs your path

A story should have a spine just like a life should have a spine just like the pages
Just like a book
